On the frontlines of a sustainable future...

National, state and local governments; academic institutions; nonprofits and NGOs play a critical role shaping how communities and business meet the challenges of a sustainable future. They are leaders who influence the scientific, technology, economic and policy frameworks on the frontlines of a sustainable future – from green buildings to business best-practices across industries, clean energy development & infrastructure, natural resources and environmental protection, climate change mitigation and adaptation, and beyond.

Our agenda for public sector leadership:

- Helping governments respond to sustainability risks and opportunities that impact critical public services and essential infrastructure.
- Aligning public policy frameworks with risk management strategies to more effectively guide communities, businesses and the economy through unprecedented climate, energy and environmental challenges.
- Helping academic institutions integrate a risk-based approach to sustainability across their organizations – from the curricula, science and R&D, to exemplary green buildings and sustainable operations on campus.
- Helping NGOs leverage a risk-based perspective to better connect their sustainability missions and programs to key stakeholders.
- Developing innovative public-private partnerships that focus on the nexus of sustainability and risk management.
- Helping local government and community organizations think globally but act locally – tackling sustainability mega-trends that play out in the context of local impacts, zoning & planning, community resilience and disaster recovery.
